Veterinary Science with Amy Fousek DVM

Veterinary Science has been busy. Members learned about several veterinary tools and then learned how to properly open a surgical pack. They sharpened their own skills by learning how to suture a wound. At the second meeting members toured a veterinary clinic, learned the tools needed to take an X-ray and how to position devices to get proper images. (Fun fact youth can not operate an X-ray device until they are 18) everyone was also given the opportunity to see how ultrasound works to detect pregnancies in goats and cattle. Many were able to use the probe to capture ultrasound images of the kids or calves. Good news in that all the animals were pregnant. In addition to the regular meetings four members are meeting weekly to learn in depth veterinary science skills, tools, breed identification and general knowledge in order to compete in a state competition at UC Davis in March. Good luck Veterinary science competition team.
